GIFT

In presenting the names and addresses of our adherents we have aimed at enabling members of the International Chamber of Commerce to tighten the bonds so happily created by the international gatherings of the Chamber. It is upon direct contact between its members that the International Chamber must rely for the realization of one of its essential objects — the creation among leaders of finance, industry and commerce in the affiliated countries of a vast net-work of friendship founded on a mutual desire for understanding and co-operation.

ETIENNE CLÉMENTEL,

THE ORGANIZATION

OF THE

INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Origin

The International Chamber of Commerce owes its origin to the International Trade Conference held at Atlantic City, U. S. A., in October 1919, which was attended by representative business men from Belgium, France, Great Britain, Italy and the United States. The International Congresses of Chambers of Commerce, held at Liège (1904), Milan (1906), Prague (1908), Boston (1912), and Paris (1914), had afforded opportunities to leaders of finance, industry and commerce in various countries to meet together and exchange views upon questions of international interest ; but the magnitude of the problems arising out of the war emphasized the fact that the establishment of a permanent international organization was a fundamental necessity.

Object

The purpose of the International Chamber, in the terms of its Constitution, is " to facilitate the commercial intercourse of countries, to secure harmony of action on all international questions affecting finance, industry, and commerce, to encourage progress and to promote peace and cordial relations among countries and their citizens by the co-operation of business men and organizations, devoted to the development of commerce and industry. "

General Characteristics

The International Chamber is a representative, non-political organization of financial, commercial and industrial interests in the various affiliated countries. It is maintained by the annual fees of its members. The members of the International Chamber (who may be either important trade organizations or prominent firms or individuals in a particular country) are formed into National Committees. Up to the present time, fourteen countries have formed National Committees and have become affiliated to the Chamber — the Argentine Republic, Austria, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Italy, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Poland, Spain, Sweden and the United States — while Norway has during the past few days constituted a National Committee and made formal application for affiliation. In certain other countries — Bulgaria, Costa Rica, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Japan, Portugal, Sudan, South Africa, Switzerland, Yugo-Slavia — trade organizations have individually become associated with the Chamber pending the formation of a National Committee comprehending the principal financial, industrial and commercial interests of the country.

Determination of Policy

The Constitution provides that a Congress shall be held by the International Chamber at least once in two years. Two such meetings have already been held — the Organization Meeting in Paris in 1920 and the First Congress, which was held in London in June 1921. On each occasion, after methodical and careful consideration, resolutions were unanimously adopted, expressing the opinion and determining the policy of the International Chamber.

While these Congresses afford a means for the collective expression of opinion of the constituent members, provision is also made under the Constitution for questions of international interest to be considered independently by means of the referendum.

A connecting link between the Congresses is afforded by the Select Committees of the International Chamber, consisting of a limited number of specialists representing the various affiliated countries. The object of these Committees is to provide for the execution of decisions taken either by a Congress or by means of a referendum, and to study problems currently before the Chamber for presentation to members by either of the methods just indicated.

Execution of Policy

The International Chamber of Commerce seeks to exercise its influence as a representative organization by different methods. It may seek to bring about legislative or administrative reforms by governmental action or by the enlightenment of public opinion; it seeks also to introduce reforms which do not require legal sanction by personal and direct agreement between the parties concerned.

The International Chamber lays before Governments, through its National Committees, the formal resolutions adopted at its Meetings, which require for their fulfilment modifications in legislative or in administrative practice, and endeavours to ensure the carrying out of these resolutions by constant pressure upon the authorities. Thus, for example, the Chamber has approached Governments in connection with various resolutions : one of them tending to mitigate the application of double taxation to the same income in two or more countries ; another to ensure reciprocity of treatment for foreign banks in different countries ; a third to abolish export duties on raw materials, etc.

Secondly, the International Chamber renders possible personal and direct understanding between business men upon questions of common interest. The representatives of Select Committees examine the problem in unison, each national representative — if he so desires — presenting his national point of view, and then the Committee agrees upon an international solution. Thus the International Chamber of Commerce is seeking to embody a common procedure for international commercial arbitration and to draw up precise definitions of trade terms in daily use (e. g. F.O.B., C.I.F., etc.) ; it is endeavouring to secure the re-establishment of international through freight trains and the inauguration of combined transport by land and by water under a single waybill ; and it proposes also to draw up an international list covering the transportation of dangerous merchandise and to secure uniform practice in the measurement of ship's nett tonnage.

In addition, the Chamber is examining means for rendering more practical and useful the statistics which are published at the present time, particularly with regard to the production and distribution of raw materials ; it is endeavouring to discover a basis of uniformity for legislation regarding commercial drafts ; it has instituted an enquiry into the question of unfair competition and especially the modifications to be introduced in the Madrid Agreement for the suppression of false marks of origin and the Washington Convention for the protection of trade marks.

Finally, through the International Chamber business men throughout the world have had an opportunity of considering the adoption, by mutual agreement and without legislative action, of the Hague Rules, 1924, which define the responsibilities of ship-owners as against merchants and traders under the terms of a bill of lading. Similarly, it has rendered practicable the consideration by business men of the application of the ter Meulen Plan, the object of which is to give exporters the necessary guarantees by which they may furnish goods to importers in impoverished countries ; it is interesting to note that this latter question has formed the subject of the first referendum held by the International Chamber.

Thus the International Chamber places at the disposal of business men a permanent organization, by means of which they may discuss methodically the questions that concern them and arrive at an international agreement.

The Council and the Executive Committee

The affairs of the Chamber are administered by a Council, whose present presiding officer is M. Etienne Clementel, ex-Minister of Commerce for France and the first President of the International Chamber of Commerce.

In addition to directing the internal administration of the Chamber, the Council is responsible for the energetic pursuit of the objects which the International Chamber has in view, and it endeavours by all proper means to ensure the realization of the policy determined by the members or the International Chamber at Congresses or by means of a referendum.

Each affiliated country is entitled to nominate from one to three Members of the Council in proportion to its commercial importance, as determined by the total amount of its external commerce.

With a view to dealing with matters requiring speedy decision and action, the Council may entrust to the Executive Committee, composed of not more than fifteen of its members, such powers as it may, from time to time, direct.

International Headquarters

International Headquarters functions under the direct supervision of a General Secretary, who is responsible to the Council. It is the duty of the General Secretary to maintain contact with and between the various National Committees, to prepare and co-ordinate the work of Congresses and Select Committees and to furnish to members of the International Chamber, by means of publications and correspondence, all possible information upon economic subjects falling within the scope of the International Chamber.

The Administrative Commission

Each affiliated country is invited to have resident at Headquarters an Administrative Commissioner, whose duty it is, either personally or at the regular meetings of the Administrative Commission, to keep the General Secretary informed as to questions and conditions of particular moment in his country. By means of these liaison officers it is possible to ensure mutual understanding and rapidity of action.

National Committees

In each country, the National Committee groups together the financial, commercial and industrial interests of the country, and it does so in two ways. On the one hand it includes the leading national trade organizations, while on the other hand it secures the personal collaboration of the principal constituent members of those organizations and of firms and individuals of eminent standing in the country. By this system the National Committee has the means of being truly and completely representative of the principal business forces of the country.

The National Committee collects the opinion of its members upon questions affecting the International Chamber and nominates representatives on the Council and Select Committees of the Chamber. Further, it is the part of the National Committee to exert the influence which attaches to it as a representative organization of business men upon the authorities and upon public opinion with a view to securing such modifications of legislation or of administrative practice as may be advocated by the resolutions or the referenda of the International Chamber.

Since members of a National Committee of the International Chamber of Commerce are business men, whose daily vision is not limited to national affairs and who have the habit of international intercourse, their advice to their respective Governments is of the greatest value, and more and more they are being called into consultation by Ministers of State, upon the manifold economic problems of the time.

Membership

The two classes of membership in the International Chamber are :

1. Organization Members, i. e. national and local financial, industrial and commercial organizations which are representatives of the interests they embrace and are not conducted for individual profit or partisan purposes. An Organization Member is entitled, subject to the Council's approval, to from one to ten delegates according to its importance, and to a corresponding number of votes on a division at a Congress or in a referendum. The annual subscription payable by an Organization Member is 300 francs for one delegate and 500 francs for each additional delegate to which it is entitled.

2. Associate Members, i. e. individuals, firms and corporations engaged in business activities, who are proposed by the National Committee and approved by the Council. The subscription for Associate Members is 300 francs.

An additional fee is in most cases paid by Organization and Associate Members to the National Committee, which is applied towards defraying expenses incident to the activities of the National Committee in connection with the Chamber.

Publications

In addition to other means of contact, the Headquarters of the International Chamber keeps in touch with its members by means of publications, which are arranged in three series :

1. Digests or pamphlets, giving information upon subjects of current interest in a precise and concise manner from an objective point of view ;

2. The Record, giving an account of the activities of the International Chamber and its National Committees ;

3. Brochures, dealing with special subjects at greater length.
